

Detection of crustal deformation on isolated islands using InSAR -- Izu-Oshima and Miyake

Satoshi Fujiwara [1], Makoto Murakami [2], Hiroyuki Nakagawa [3], Mikio Tobita [4], Paul Rosen [5]

[1] GSI,Mizusawa, [2] Crustal Deformation Lab., The GSI, [3] Space Geodesy Lab., GSI, [4] Construction Coll., [5] JPL

Making SAR interferograms, precise determination of a baseline between positions of a satellite is very important. It is difficult to determine the baseline for an isolated island using only the island scene data. So it is necessary to use other land data near the island. Using this method, we detected crustal deformation in Izu-Oshima, and the island has been continuously inflating and the caldera has been sinking.