

On usable frequency for EM transmission experiment from borehole electrodes at the Nojima fault

Takayuki Tsuji [1], # Naoto Ishii [2], Ichiro Tomizawa [3], Naoto Oshiman [4]

[1] SSRO, Univ. of Electro-Comm., [2] SSRO. Univ. of Electro-Comm., [3] Sugadaira Space Radio Obs., Univ. of Electro-Comm., [4] DPRI, Kyoto Univ.

Usable frequency for EM transmission down to the borehole electrodes is discussed based on the power transmission efficiencies. The electrodes are installed across the fractured zone at the Nojima fault. We estimate the transmission efficiency by using characteristic impedances of the cable and input impedances between electrode pairs. It is concluded that the usable frequency is between 100 kHz and 1 MHz.

Usable frequency for EM transmission down to the borehole electrodes is discussed based on the power transmission efficiencies. The electrodes are installed across the fractured zone at the Nojima fault. We estimate the transmission efficiency by using characteristic impedances of the cable and input impedances between electrode pairs. It is concluded that the usable frequency is between 100 kHz and 1 MHz.