

Atmospheric composition measurement with re-usable rocket

Naomoto Iwagami[1]

[1] Earth and Planetary Science, U Tokyo

One of the most effective ways to use the re-usable rocket is to measure atomic oxygen in the MLT region. Although atomic oxygen is the most important constituent there, the measuring method has not yet established because of shock waves produced around the sounding rocket.

