

V157-002

Room: Ocean B

Time: May 21 9:15-9:30

Effects of suspended crystal content on the compositional evolution of magmas during crystal settling

Koshi Nishimura[1]

[1] Inst. for Geothermal Sciences, Kyoto Univ.

Effects of suspended crystal content on the compositional evolution of magmas during crystal settling are investigated theoretically. Two mass balance models are developed, one for the case that perfect equilibrium is attained between suspended crystals and liquid, and another for the case that the equilibration is prevented by zoning of crystals.